DERUTA ITALIAN
CERAMICS

Deruta has been renowned for Italian majolica since the Renaissance.

The population of Deruta, Italy, is less than 10,000. But for centuries, this tiny town in the region of Umbria has been renowned for making tin-glazed, decorated ceramics known as majolica. During the Renaissance, artisans in Umbria began making Italian majolica using clay from the Tiber River. In the early part of the period, practical pieces like bowls and basins decorated with abstract and geometric motifs were common. Later, toward the end of the Renaissance, majolica was elevated to a high art form that was considered as important as painting and sculpture, and pieces were shipped throughout Europe. Now as then, Italian majolica is prized for its intricate designs, lustrous colors, and superb levels of craftsmanship.

CERAMICS

COSSETTA'S IS PROUD TO IMPORT MAJOLICA DIRECTLY FROM DERUTA.

Every piece of majolica reflects a tradition of artistry handed down from generation to generation.

If you ever travel through Umbria, it's impossible not to fall upon scores of majolica workshops and stores. But while a number of towns in the region make majolica, for true devotees of the ceramics, only one place will do: Deruta. During the Renaissance, Deruta established itself as the leading center for the production of Italian majolica. Today, little has changed. With the exception of modern firing techniques, the process for making Italian majolica remains much as it was 500 years ago.

Deruta sits on a hill beside the Tiber River, from which artisans can draw an almost inexhaustible supply of clay — clay that's ideally suited to the low firing temperatures that result in the brilliant, long-lasting colors that are the hallmark of majolica. Once gathered, the clay is cleaned of impurities and shaped by hand into various forms, often on a potter's wheel.

Many of the designs that are painted on by hand are hundreds of years old, including Raffaellesco.

Pieces are dried for several days, fired in a kiln, cooled, and dipped into a mineral oxide bath. Each piece is then painstakingly painted by hand and fired again for up to 24 hours. This second firing results in the intensity of color for which Italian majolica is known.

The majority of Italian majolica bears the mark "DOC," a government certification that verifies production in a specific region according to rules that preserve the practices of that region. If outside materials, artists, or patterns are used, the status of DOC will not be granted.

Majolica takes its name from Majorca, a Spanish island. In the 6th century, the Arabs, then called the Moors, developed a process for applying mineral oxides to fired clay. When the Moors started moving westward and conquering North Africa, Spain and Sicily, they brought the techniques of Majolica with them. The tradition found its way to Italy in the 1200's, when ceramics from the Moors were shipped there via ports in Majorca. The Italians mistakenly thought the ceramics originated in Majorca, hence the name majolica.

WE'RE OFFERING SEVERAL PATTERNS WITH TIMELESS APPEAL.

RAFFAELLESCO

Raffaellesco was inspired by the frescoes of Raphael. Its central motif, the dragon, symbolizes a benevolent deity who brought good luck to sailors. Today, it is believed that having a piece or two of Raffaellesco in your home brings blessings and good luck.

RICCO DERUTA Ricco, which means rich is aptly named. This floral pattern is rich in design and color and, like Raffaellesco, was inspired by the frescoes of Raphael.

ANTICO Antico features a traditional pattern in white and yellow against a cobalt-blue background. The design reflects the architectural decorations of the late Roman and Renaissance periods.

ARABESCO Arabesco is reminiscent of patterns in Arabic art, and features a bird, abstract flowers and foliage.

MODERN Gerbi specializes in proprietary designs, including whimsical depictions of animals and flowers, that update traditional majolica patterns.
